Editorial Review

From School Library Journal

Grade 2-3-- Paul's teenage sister, Tina, is addicted to drugs. He has seen her personality change and has refused her offer of pills. He feels guilty but tells their mother. Later Tina is picked up by the police for drug use in the park and is sent to a rehabilitation center. Because of Tina, Paul's new friend Jose doesn't want to play with him and there is no money to send him to soccer camp, but in the end his parents, his soccer coach, and Jose turn out to be true friends. Muted realistic watercolors with black ink outlines complement the text, capturing the feelings and dilemmas of the characters. This is bibliotherapy rather than literature, and is best used as part of a drug education/awareness program. --Renee Blumenkrantz, Davis Community Library, Bethesda, MD

From the Back Cover

It's bad enough when Paul's big sister, Tina, turns mean and hangs out with mean kids. But when the family discovers Tina's drug abuse problem, things turn much worse. Paul's new friend doesn't want to play with him, and Paul can't go to soccer camp because Tina's hospital program costs so much. Worst of all, Paul's afraid that his sister may not recover. But with work and love, it looks as if all kinds of things in Paul's life will soon be getting better.
